

The greetings-card industry started to take off back in the 1840s when stamps were introduced into the postal system. Before then, only well-off people could afford to commission artists to engrave and print cards and get them hand-delivered.